

Jamie-Lee Wainman

Designer, Facilitator, and Educator.

I am a creative practitioner who uses play and creativity as a tool within their work. I am passionate about the benefits of creative and playful learning and I use my neurodivergence to push and challenge creative boundaries.

Work Experience

3D Printing Technician

Print City, 3D Printing Services (2017)

- I helped clients model and 3D print their ideas. I can print on FDM and SLA printers and process and finish final designs. This allowed me to develop client relationships and problem solving skills.

Creative Producer Internship

42nd Street, Mental Health Charity (03/2020)

- I hosted workshops online that focused on the benefits of creative expression for wellbeing. I also hosted daily tasks on social media, to encourage young people to engage in creative wellbeing during the 2020 Panademic. I became more confident engaging in group facilitation and how to work with vulnerable young people.

Arts for Wellbeing Mentor

Manchester Metropolitan University (06/2020)

- I mentored a group of 6 University students on an arts for wellbeing programme. This included hosting weekly workshops and 1 to 1 sessions with the students; supporting their project development. This experience allowed me to understand and engage with a range of learning approaches.

Artist in Residence

42nd Street, Mental Health Charity (09/2020)

- I worked with a designer and a 42nd Street young person to create an art instillation, raising awareness of bullying. We explored scale, materials, and using different actions to create art. The instillation presented a powerful message for the public.

Creative Collective

42nd Street, Mental Health Charity (2020/2021)

- We are a collective of practitioners who work with 42nd Street through commissioned work. We work on exhibitions and campaigns focused within creative wellbeing. I bring my playful learning approach to the collective.

Endometriosis Awareness Zine

Manchester (01/2021)

- Due to my own experience with Endometriosis I wanted to raise awareness of the illness. I created playful and humorous illustrations to portray facts, making the learning experience less intimidating and less overwhelming. I designed the illustrations myself and created the zine using Adobe InDesign.
